Iconic Paris nightclub set to reopen at new location

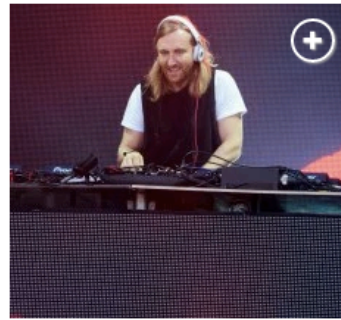

Iconic Champs-Élysées nightclub Queen — where mega-DJs like David Guetta and Dimitri from Paris got their start in the '90s — will reopen in September at a new location across the street from its original one.

The club was bought in March for $77 million by New York's Thor Equities. Miami's François Frossard, who designed Story and LIV plus restaurants and residential properties in Mexico and Chicago, will give the club a fresh look with mirrored walls and LED lighting.

Guetta will play at the opening party on Sept. 2.

The club is expected to host DJs and topless dancers plucked from famed Paris cabarets Crazy Horse and Lido — some who'll be “suspended in air, sitting on a giant disco ball.”
